Straits Pond

Jerusalem Road in Cohasset and Atlantic Avenue in Hull.

Wednesday night both towns agreed to submit articles in their warrants. Hull will hold a Special Town Meeting on March 12; Cohasset's annual Town Meeting will start April 7.

Beni said that the difficulty in evaluating Straits Pond and projecting the outcome of the study was partially due to the lack of "hard-core data" or limnological information about the pond and its environs. He was, however, enthusiastic about the completion of the DEQE study and indicated that a Coastal Zone Management (CZM) grant will be applied for in March, and if additional work needs to be done a Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC) grant will be sought.

"If this study (DEQE) will be the foundation for other studies and grants," Beni said, "then it will be worthwhile." Beni said the DEQE study would encompass Phase I, the examination of the pond's characteristics but would probably not be able to resolve all the conditions afflicting the pond.

The Pond may ultimately need dredging and a tie-in with the town's sewerage system, Beni said. "There is raw sewerage from Hull and Cohasset coming into Straits Pond via storm drains," he said.

Selectman Mary Jeanette Murray said that two Cohasset health agents had previously denied this source of pollution. Beni maintained that the problem exists as a joint problem between the two towns.

Eventually, if other grants are obtained to implement corrective measures for the Pond, an automated flood-gate may be constructed to change the water's salinity.

"It is thought, Beni said, that a change in the pond's salt content might destroy harmful vegetation and insects, such as midges. Beni noted the Pond's potential for use as a fish hatchery, clam breeding, light fishing and recreational purposes.

A standard article requesting a sum for the town's share of the cost of insect, vegetable, and animal life in the pond will also be heard at Town Meeting.

Seminar On Copywriting

Rik Tinory, Cohasset recording artist and producer, presented a seminar and workshop on how to copyright original work at Curry College in Milton.
